18th Century Dowser

Dowsing / Divining

"A dowsing tool is simply a read-out, interface or communication device. It is controlled through or by your subconscious, or something of that nature. Everyone can dowse but like most procedures, it will take practice and experience to be good at it. You can train your Subconscious to use many types of tools or devices. Professional dowsers use different kinds of dowsing tools. L ROD, Y ROD, Pendulum and the Bobber are the basic tools of dowsing. Dowsing devices come in all sizes, shapes and, materials and many dowsers have their favorites tools that work well for them."

Dowsing appears to have arisen in the context of Renaissance magic in Germany, and it remains popular among believers in "Fortean" or "radiesthesia" In fact, dowsing is the ancient art of finding water, minerals and other objects that seem to have a natural magnetic or other unknown energy.

"A forked rod, or branch of tree, that in the hands of certain people is said to indicate, by means of spasmodic movements of varying intensity, the presence of water and minerals under-ground. Traditionally the rod is of hazel wood and V-shaped and the ends are held by the operator. Other materials such as right-angle wire rods are claimed to be equally effective. Diviners claim that under the effect of "rhabdic force," the rod twists or revolves when the operator passes over underground water or minerals. The term rhabdic derives from the Greek for rod."

"Depending on what the dowser desires to find he may hold a bottle of water, a piece of metal, an empty tube (in searching for caverns), or a personal object (for a corpse in water) in his hand."

As translated from one preface of the Kassel experiments, "roughly 10,000 active dowsers in Germany alone can generate a conservatively-estimated annual revenue of more than 100 million DM (US$50 million)". Using the Rod

1. Make certain that your thumb knuckles are pressed lightly against the handles when dowsing. Practice walking over the long length of the target cord several times with a relaxed body and mind.
2. If you are still having problems obtaining a dowsing signal, try thinking of a 'positive/happy' event and put a smile on your face, and then dowse the long length of the target cord.
3. If you continue to have no success obtaining a dowsing signal, then stand at one end of the target cord and verbally address the rods....."Rods, ('cross' or, 'divert') when I walk over the target cord"then dowse the long length of the target cord.
4. If you continue to have no success obtaining a dowsing signal, then call it quits for a while. Try again later when you are relaxed and rested (and hopefully not frustrated!) and repeat the above suggestions.
